“Nonviolent Solutions to Structural Oppression”

Western Washington FOR

Every year WWFOR brings grassroots folks together for a Spring Assembly to share ideas and strengthen the movements for social justice, nonviolence and peace. Our 2015 Spring Assembly on Saturday April 11 will be more participatory than ever.

This year's theme and activities: The problems we keep seeing at global, national, and local levels are huge, persistent, and deeply rooted. The Vietnam war was not an aberration from an otherwise peaceful foreign policy, nor are police abuses caused by “a few bad apples,” nor is homelessness the fault of people making bad choices, nor are people of color to blame for the effects of racial disparities. Big problems cause continuous violence, continuous injustice, and continuous trauma stress. Society needs profound healing from addictions to greed, violence, and racism.

These big problems that cause ongoing oppression are “structural” - built into our society's systems. Solving them requires more than masking symptoms, applying band-aids, or enacting liberal “reforms” that merely tinker around their edges.

Real solutions require radical (getting to the root) approaches based on nonviolent values that profoundly respect the unity of the entire human family and all of our ecosystems. Real solutions require active listening and bold, creative alternatives to structural oppression.

Today is VERY PARTICIPATORY! Instead of one keynote speech to a passive audience, everyone will be able to collaborate in shaping our keynote message to flesh out 2015's theme, “Nonviolent Solutions to Structural Oppression.” Morning workshops will explore problems. Afternoon small groups will allow everyone to generate creative nonviolent solutions.

“Anticipating Stigma: The Double Burden of Homelessness and Race”

Carolyn Weisz is a Professor of Social Psychology at the University of Puget Sound.

Social stigma, whether anticipated or experienced, may create distress for individuals without homes and play a role in sustaining homelessness. Professor Carolyn Weisz will discuss her research on how stigma related to homelessness and race predicts psychological distress, physical health, and avoidance of using services. Workshop participants will have the opportunity to discuss the findings and generate ideas about reducing stigma, homelessness, and racism.

“Don’t say, ‘Thank You for Your Service.’ That Continues My Oppression.”

Dennis W. Mills is an Army veteran who participates with FOR, VFP, TCTV, Coffee Strong, and Friendly Water for the World.

Zahid Chaudhry is a lifelong peace & justice activist, community volunteer and disabled American veteran.

Mark Fleming is a veteran of the American War in Vietnam and a peace activist for decades.

These Army veterans will lead a discussion on how today’s service members and veterans have been structurally oppressed even before they enlisted and continue beyond in their civilian lives. Join us in exploring how war, moral injury, PTSD, sexual oppression, poverty draft, homelessness, unemployment, and militarism are the oppressors.

“Resistance Against Detentions and Deportations”

Maru Mora Villalpando is a community organizer, trainer, political analyst, consultant, and founder of Latino Advocacy.

A movement led by undocumented immigrants has created a rippled effect around the nation, putting pressure in the Obama administration to act and building organizing inside the worst detention conditions in immigration prisons. Learn from undocumented leaders about their fight to be recognized as human beings and how to become a true ally to movements led by low-income people of color impacted by systematic legalized injustices and action.

“Yes, the Climate Crisis Is a Multi-Dimensional Example of ‘Structural Oppression’”

Glen Anderson has organized FOR activities for 40 years and is active with Olympia FOR’s climate group.

The climate crisis goes far beyond environmental concerns to actually hurt many aspects of our lives as individuals, as communities and societies, and as members of the earth’s ecosystems. Scientists agree that humans caused the climate crisis. Powerful economic and political forces — structural oppressors” in the context of today’s theme — cause the problems. As with other big problems, real solutions can arise only through local grassroots organizing.

“The Ukraine Crisis: A Serious Danger of Nuclear War”

Bernie Meyer and Mary Hanson have long experience organizing for peace and against nuclear weapons, especially through FOR and the Ground Zero Center for Nonviolent Action.

The Ground Zero community is alarmed by the escalating conflict between the US and Russia in the Ukraine. NATO and EU member nations are participants. The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists moved the minute hand at three minutes to midnight, due to nuclear war and rising climate crisis tensions. Let’s understand the roots of the conflict and determine our response. Read www.truth-out.org/opinion/item/29369-ukraine-war-a-reverse-cuban-missile-crisis

“The Criminalization of Blackness”

Rev. Harriett Walden, founder of Mothers Against Police Harassment

This workshop will explore how the Criminalization of Blackness has led to violence against a whole race of people, through the enslavement of human beings and Jim Crow, and how this foundation for increased violence over centuries continues to this day. We will examine why in 1951 the Negroes went to the UN for help to stop the violence with “We Charge Genocide,” and we’ll end with why Black Lives Matter.

“Ending Mass Incarceration Through Transformative Education”

Mary Dewine is an instructor in Developmental Studies at Tacoma Community College.

We will discuss education as the tool to transform and end the cycle of imprisonment. Women are the fastest growing segment of the prison population, especially in Washington. Freedom Education Project Puget Sound will present how rigorous accredited college courses for incarcerated women are changing the culture of prison inside, and how women who pursue higher education, return to society more psychologically stable and with stronger economic prospects.
